MORRIS COLLEGE STUDENTS

Up Close and Personal

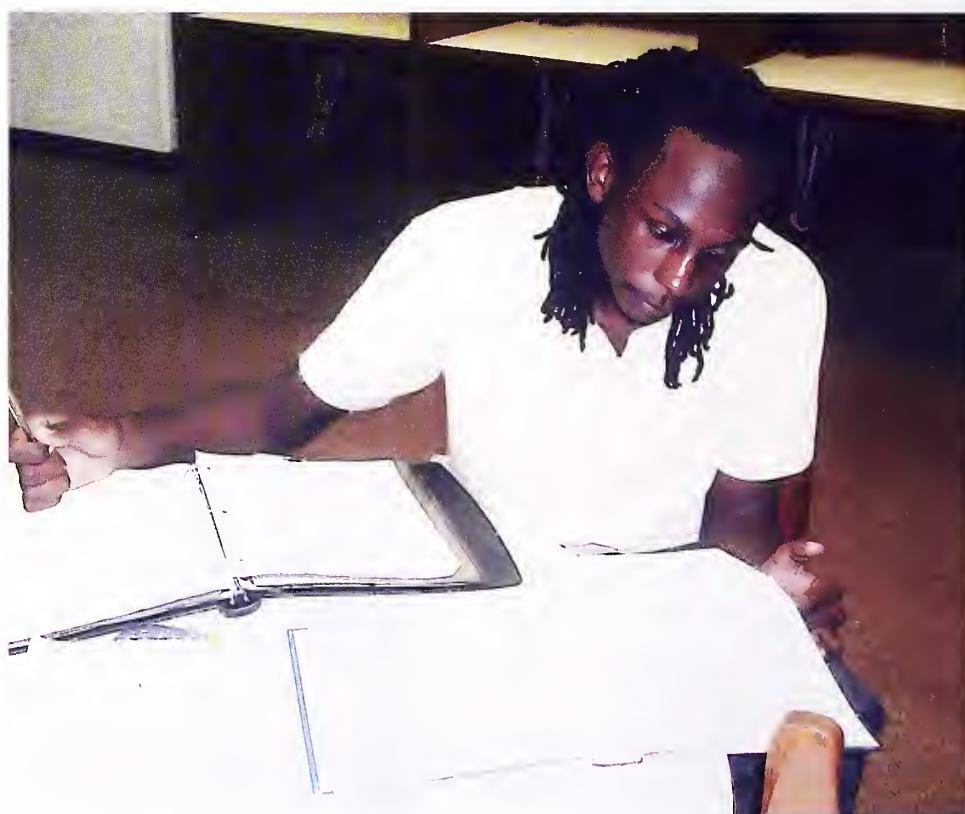

ER

The Task Morris College has chosen is to enlighten the intellect of a rising generation of young people.

Morris College helps us to uncover our abilities and interests, to exercise and develop skills, to arrive at new insights and new solutions.

The measure of one's worth is inside the head and heart.

We are not afraid to experiment, to challenge the old and try the new.

We believe in our capacity to learn, our potential to achieve.

Through learning, we assume responsibility for our own development.

Studying is serious business. Professors are always willing to assist with classroom assignments and in discussions of issues confronting America such as education, social justice, jobs, health and wellness, public policy, and immorality.

Change can only come about from those individuals who are faithful to the awakening spirit of learning.

We listen, we watch and commit ourselves to learning.

All of us have special strenghts and insights which we must use to transform ourselves and our communities.

We seek not only strong minds, but strong bodies.

Our emotions, impulses, and aspirations are all in search of ourselves.

Social, cultural and athletic activities brighten our lives.

Administrators and professors teach us to establish a spiritual connection to God, and to value a force greater than ourselves.

We face the future with faith - moving forward to a new and better beginning.

Adopt-a-Freshman Project
Final Report
Robert J. Zalimas

Following the suggestions of Dr. Reginald Bess, the history project of the Adopt-a-Freshman Program focused on the Briggs v. Elliot Supreme Court Case. Although relatively unknown outside of the Carolinas, the case was the first to challenge racial segregation in schools. Because it took place in Clarendon County, the students were able to use local resources to study the case in great detail. The project was divided into three parts: a PowerPoint Presentation; taped interviews with descendants; and, critical analysis of the case through contemporary newspaper research.

The first step of the project focused on learning the basic tenants of the case. Each student studied the case through a special report published by The State (Columbia, SC) newspaper. The students had easy access to the article for Dr. Bess saved the report, laminated the sections, and posted them in the general studies hallway of the Brawley-Starks building. This report provided an excellent and lengthy overview of the case. Once students aquired a working knowledge of the case, we then moved on to museum research.

In November 2004, the students and I traveled to Columbia to visit the McKissick Museum on the campus of the University of South Carolina. The museum is hosting a traveling exhibit on the Briggs case entitled Courage: The Carolina Story That Changed America. The exhibit was an excellent rescourse in learning about the case through visual and audio presentation. Some of the highlights included: a presentation on rural life in Clarendon County at the time; a comparison of black schools v. white schools; an audio and visual presentation of the DeLaine family; contemporary newspaper and magazine articles, and, a visual representation of the famous "doll test". Although most vistors spend less than an hour at the exhibit, our students took two full hours studyng and recording each stage. In fact, the museum curator, Mr. Jason E. Shaiman, remarked that he was "very excited" to see the "intense interest" of our students, and that our students gave more attention to the exhibit than all previous groups that visited the museum. Afterwards, we supplemented the trip with a visit to the African American memorial located at the state capitol.

A week later our research took us to Charlotte, North Carolina. There, we visited and interviewed the sons of Reverend Joseph DeLaine: B.B. DeLaine and Joseph DeLaine, Jr. Their father spearheaded the petition drive by African American parents in which they argued the county should provide a school bus for the black children of Clarendon County. Both men were very gracious and provided a detailed and firsthand account of the case. The students created their own questions for the visit and used video cameras and audio recorders to conduct the interviews.

After researching the subject matter in great detail, the students then presented the material to the Freshman class. The students created a PowerPoint presentation featuring pictures and narrative from both field trips. During this presentation, another group of students supplemented the material with a video presentation taken from our Charlotte visit. Following this demonstration, a third group of students then presented their newspaper research analysis using a diplay board to highlight and contrast contemporary reporting of the case. Like the first two groups, these students used critical thinking skills and analysis to teach different aspects of the lawsuit. Once all three presentations were completed, the students offered a gospel song and an original poem to provide personal reflection about the case and to honor those who sacrificed, suffered, and eventually triumphed in their fight against racism.

Overall, the experience was a tremendous opportunity to teach and learn outside the classroom. The students thoroughly enjoyed the trips and fully embraced the chance to study historical events using alternative means. Many of the students remarked how the experience changed their perspective of history and gave them a newfound respect for those who challenged racial discrimination in the Jim Crow era. The project inspired and motivated our students to understand that the opportunity to learn is not only held in the classroom, but is a lifelong challenge that they will forever embrace with heightened passion.
